

1. I have a friend who is a Jewish believer and he asked me if I, as a non-Jewish believer, pray to the Father or to the Son (or to the Holy Spirit for that matter), and I really didn't know what to say. Is it OK to pray to Jesus or the Spirit? Although it sounds funny to me, I just don't know.
2. I have a hard time thinking about how God is love and yet so many people are hurting. I have no idea how to answer people who would ask me about this apparent contradiction. How do I reconcile this to a person who is hurting and not sound trite or like a walking cliché?
3. Are there ways to know God other than the Bible?
4. What if I do not believe in the Trinity? Does that exclude me from being a Christian? Also, how much uncertainty can I have about the Trinity and still be a believer? I ask because I understand T.D. Jakes does not believe in the Trinity and he is a pastor of over 25, 000 people in Dallas.
